Hey!

No worries Annie, and you don't have to explain yourself. I could tell from those texts that you had a lot going on, and I wanted to be a caring ear in case you needed to vent. You don't have to thank me either, it's all good. That's what good people do, help each other and listen to each other.

There should be more people like you in the world.

I think I'm going to eat a pizza tonight, that's my M&M's!

My problems are far less important than yours, believe me, mine revolve around meeting the right girl, which up to this point, hasn't happened, and it is very frustrating....

But that's a story for another time!

Talk to you soon!

Hi George,

Thanks for being concerned about me and my well being. I truly appreciated it. I may not have given you that impression over the phone. Thanks for being there.

I just do not like people worrying over me. I am they type of person that will help or at least try to guide you in the right direction. Most people would describe me as little Annie, always with a smile and always there and willing to help. I definitely put others over myself (I must have inherited that trait from my dad.) My way of dealing with this situation is just "bottling" it all in. Yes, I know what you are going to say. . "It's not good." I will not allow people to see me cry.

Please do not worry; there are more important issues to be concerned about. If you really want to know, I will tell you but you have to promise me that you will not feel bad or no tears. There is always M&Ms (hahaha).

Thanks, George. Have a good day.
